

The Fellowship of Woodrow Wilson Scholars has selected Michael Geruso, Francisco Perez Arce Novaro, and Adam Zawadowski for 2009-10 Wilson Fellowships. The aim of the Wilson Fellowship is to bring faculty and graduate students together to examine multi- and interdisciplinary perspectives in relation to important issues of international and domestic public policy.

Rafael Dix Carneiro has been awarded a Harold W. Dodds Honorific Fellowship for the 2009-10 academic year. This fellowship acknowledges his distinguished work, outstanding performance, and professional promise in the Department of Economics.

Tao Wang has been awarded the 2009 PEI-STEP (Princeton Environmental Institute). The goal of PEI-STEP is to make students more effective and more versatile in their careers as scientists, teachers, and leaders in the public and private sectors and to increase awareness among science and engineering students and faculty of how their discipline-based skills can be brought to bear on environmental problems.

The Center for Economic Policy Studies (CEPS)'s first annual graduate fellowship, given to a graduate student engaged in public policy oriented research, was awarded to Jade Vichyanond for his research on how differences in intellectual property (IP) protection affect trade patterns.

Congratulations to all of our award winners!
