

WAVES IN SPACE

The Spatiotemporal Movement of Spatial Justice

Andreas Philippopoulos-Mihalopoulos, LLB, LLM, PhD, is Professor of Supradisciplinary Studies at the University of Westminster, and founder and Director of The Westminster Law & Theory Lab. He holds permanent professorial affiliations with the Centre for Politics, Management and Philosophy, Copenhagen Business School since 2006, and the University Institute of Architecture, Venice since 2009.

In an attempt to explore the spatiotemporal in terms of law and justice, I will be looking at three modes of time in relation to three concepts of the lawscape (namely the tautology between law and matter), atmosphere (namely, the ontology of affective excess that keeps bodies together, through, with and against each other), and spatial justice (namely, the question that arises when a body wants to move into the space of another body at the same time). Building on my work on the above concepts, I will be discussing the times of repetition, of the atmospheric horizon, and of the now of spatial justice. This work is influenced by a post-Deleuzian, Spinozan, new materialist understanding of space, time and bodies.

Tuesday, October 4, 12:00 to 1:20 pm in 210 Dickinson Hall

IHUM is supported by the Humanities Council at Princeton humanities interdisciplinary doctoral program in the humanities interdisciplinary doctoral program in the humanities interdisciplinary doctoral program in the humanities interdisciplinary doctoral program in the humanities

