RESEARCH ASSISTANT

We seek a full-time research assistant for the academic year 2014-2015 (though exact start and end dates are flexible). The research assistant will work for two professors in Princeton's Department of Economics, carrying out data collection, analysis, literature reviews and other work on a variety of projects in the areas of health, inequality, development, demography, and political economy.

The ideal candidate will have a strong quantitative background, computer programming skills (including substantial experience and comfort with Stata), and an ability to work independently. A BA in economics or statistics is preferred, though not required. The position provides benefits and competitive salary. While the research assistant will have office space on the Princeton campus, working from home (especially from NYC) would be perfectly acceptable.

If interested, please e-mail Ilyana Kuziemko (kuziemko@princeton.edu) and Tom Vogl (tvogl@princeton.edu) with the following:

• A cover letter briefly describing your goals in seeking the position.
• A CV.
• A complete undergraduate transcript and graduate transcript (if applicable). Unofficial transcripts are fine.
• The names of two professional references.
