Fall 2013 Courses

PhD Gateway in Security Studies - WWS 550

Christopher F. Chyba, Gary J. Bass, Aaron L. Friedberg

The field of Security Studies is distinguished by its focus on a clearly delineated set of intellectual and practical problems. This course will serve as the required gateway for all students entering the Woodrow Wilson School's new PhD cluster in Security Studies. Students will take this course during the fall semester of their first year.

Rural Energy Alternatives in India - Policy Workshop WWS591F

M.V. Ramana

The STEP policy workshop will focus on distributed renewable electricity projects in India. The workshop will explore the progress of distributed electricity generation, their sustainability, and obstacles to their wider adoption, by examining factors such as national and state-level policies, financing strategies, electricity tariffs, competition with grid expansion, and community participation. Overall, the workshop will attempt to highlight the intersection of environmental concerns, energy issues and development problems in an international context.

Scientists Against Time - Freshman Seminar - FRS171

Harold Feiveson