

PRACTICAL NORMATIVITY: REASONS, VALUE, AND FITTINGNESS

Practical Normativity: Reasons, Value, and Fittingness will focus on a range of meta-normative issues including, but not restricted to, the objectivity of normative claims, the nature of normative knowledge, and the relationship between normative reasoning and normative facts. The seminar will take place online in the Summer of 2021.

The focus of the seminar will be the manuscript of Conor McHugh and Jonathan Way's Getting Things Right: Reasons, Value, and Fittingness which is scheduled to be published by Oxford University Press. The seminar will include a variety of formats. We will work through the manuscript of McHugh and Way's book; we will give participants the opportunity to ask McHugh and Way questions; and we will have four outside speakers give talks on related topics.

Attendance at the seminar is by application. Those eligible to apply are graduate students from Princeton University and doctoral, Master and, in exceptional cases, Bachelor students ('Philosophie' or 'Philosophie/Ethik') from Humboldt University in Berlin.
