U.S. Copyright law test

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material. Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be “used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship or research.” If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or other reproduction for purposes in excess of “fair use,” that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

MERCER LAW REVIEW

September 22, 1954

Professor Edward S. Corwin
Old Stone House
Stockton Road
Princeton, N. J.

Dear Professor Corwin:

Professor Lenoir has written me about your kind letter to him regarding the article he and his wife wrote for the spring issue of the MERCER LAW REVIEW. You can understand how proud we are to have published this article.

It is a pleasure to send you by separate parcel a dozen copies of this article for which there will be no charge.

Sincerely yours,

James C. Quarles
Faculty Advisor
