U.S. Copyright law test

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material. Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be “used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship or research.” If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or other reproduction for purposes in excess of “fair use,” that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

Professor Edward S. Corwin
487 Stockton Street
Princeton, New Jersey

Dear Professor Corwin:

Mrs. Stout handed me an autographed copy of your Twelfth Revised Edition of "The Constitution and What it Means Today" which you so generously gave "to the Princeton Bank and Trust Company, its officers and staff, with warm regards."

We are most fortunate to receive this latest edition of your book on Constitutional Law, which has come to be known as "a classic" in its field.

Princeton is honored by you, your teachings, and your writings and we are proud to count you among our distinguished friends, customers, and stockholders.

After it has been read by a number of us, it will find a prominent place in the library of Mr. Cook's new office.

With many thanks for your generosity and thoughtfulness, and with kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Harold E. Zarker
Vice President

Dear Professor Corwin:

It was a very great pleasure to read in the "Times" this morning, that Princeton had conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws upon you. I can think of no one who has done more to deserve the honor and I congratulate you most sincerely.

Jack Brewer, whom I saw recently for the first time in ten years, brought the good news that you are in good health and I hope very much that I shall be able to confirm that by seeing you myself in the not too distant future.

With heartiest congratulations and all good wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours, .

Dear Mr. Corwin:

It is hard to find words to express my pleasure at seeing you and Mrs. Corwin again last Saturday. It was like old times - the nicest of old times - to sit across a table from you in your study and talk to you again. I know I stayed too long, but somehow I wished it could have been longer.

The nicest part of it was to find you still so hale, hearty, and vitally interested in Politics as you always were.

I had been practicing law for a good many years before I realized how much and how well you had taught us a sound line of approach to legal problems. It's been of inestimable value, and I think of you often when I employ it.

With all good wishes to both of you, I am
Sincerely,
Frank B. Jones

My dear Professor Corwin:

I am enclosing 15 cents in postage stamps for a copy of your recent radio address on the Constitution.

May I take this occasion to congratulate you on your very solid and clear-cut views on this all-important issue?

Sincerely yours,

James Zobian.

Dear Professor Corwin:

I want to thank you again for helping me out last week when I was floundering around in legal aspects of legislative immunity. The two articles were a great help and I turned out a lengthy piece of background material, but it was the first thing to be cut when we ran short of space for the Pearson-McKellar story. Even so, I count myself quite an authority on the subject now and I appreciate all your trouble.

Sincerely,

Harriet P. Zwierschke
