

About the Magazine

What Is Nassau Weekly?

The Nassau Weekly is the non-profit, student-run weekly magazine of Princeton University. Since 1979, our magazine has been dedicated to examining news, culture, sports, the arts, and opinion on and off campus. We welcome well-written articles from any source, and do not emphasize a specific political viewpoint.

Prominent alumni include David Remnick, '81, current editor-in-chief of The New Yorker; Alexander Wolff, '79, senior writer for Sports Illustrated; author Robert Faggen; Todd Purdum, '82, political correspondent for The New York Times; Alex Gansa, '84, writer for X-Files; and Thomas Payne, '84, editorial cartoonist for The Detroit News.

Who Reads Nassau Weekly?

The Nassau Weekly is delivered for free to every Princeton undergraduate's door, the graduate college, academic and administrative departments, 11 eating clubs, the campus center, and popular spots along Nassau Street.

We distribute 2,700 issues per week, and have an estimated per-issue, on-campus readership of 5,000.

Why Advertise in Nassau Weekly?

- Largest, per issue student readership of any Princeton University student publication.
- Free, so everyone on campus is a subscriber.
- Less expensive than the same ad in The Daily Princetonian.
- Significant discounts for regular advertisers.
