

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

During the course of this study we benefited from numerous conversations with colleagues at RAND. We are indebted to Alvin Harman, Milbrey McLaughlin, Dan Weiler, and Al Williams for their helpful comments during the early stages of the study. Walter Baer, Paul Berman, Edward Merrow, Barbara Williams, and Robert Yin both contributed to the conceptualization of the study and provided thoughtful critiques of drafts along the way.

We benefited greatly from two meetings with the Panel on Applications of Science and Technology, Office of Technology Assessment. The wide range of perspectives represented on the panel resulted in challenging and productive exchanges. Don E. Kash, Nathan Caplan, and Richard R. Nelson provided helpful comments on an earlier draft. Finally, we express particular appreciation to our Program Officer, John Young, whose interest led us to undertake this research and whose continued thoughtful questioning has contributed substantially to the report.
