
The Committee for South Asian Studies at Princeton University invites applications for Princeton Institute for International and Regional Studies (PIIRS) research fellowships in South Asian Studies. Two fellows will be appointed in 2005–2006 for one semester each, during which they will be expected to teach one course, conditional on approval of a Princeton department and the Dean of the Faculty, and to participate in South Asia-related academic activities on campus.

These fellowships are open to scholars in all disciplines in the social sciences and humanities, and to outstanding artists, writers, and professionals. A doctoral degree is required, though exceptions may be made for persons with exceptional experience, achievement, and eminence in their fields.

Salaries will be between $23,000 and $33,000, depending on qualifications and experience, for one semester (terms of residence September 1, 2005 to January 31, 2006, and February 1 to June 30, 2006), and fellows will be eligible for University health plans. Fellows will also be reimbursed up to $1800 for the cost of economy-class, round-trip travel from their place of permanent residence, and provided with a modest research grant.

Fellows are expected to be in residence at Princeton at all times, devoting the major portion of their time to research and teaching, and to the programs of the Committee for South Asian Studies. They will enjoy full access to the University’s library, archival, and computing resources.

Candidates should submit (1) a letter of application describing their suitability for the fellowship; (2) a curriculum vitae with a list of publications; (3) a sample of their written work (or other relevant samples in cases of artists and professionals); (4) a teaching portfolio, containing a statement on teaching experience, and a syllabus; and (5) three letters of recommendation, which should be sent directly to the Committee.

DEADLINE: All application materials (including letters of recommendation) must be received by January 15, 2005.
