REVISED REPORT

Nelson was an expert in the field of Magnetism and was well known for his work on the subject. His lectures were always well attended and his reputation was high in the scientific community.

The lecture focused on the properties of magnets and the principles of magnetic attraction and repulsion. Nelson explained the basic concepts of magnetic field and the behavior of magnetic materials. He also discussed the applications of magnetism in various fields such as engineering, geology, and medicine.

The audience was attentive and engaged throughout the lecture, asking questions and participating in discussions. Nelson's clear and concise explanations made the complex topic of magnetism accessible to all.

In conclusion, the lecture on Magnetism was a great success and provided valuable insights into the field. Nelson's expertise and passion for the subject were evident, and the audience learned a great deal from his presentation.

proposed, because, fromnow, great young men under twenty-one years of age wish to indulge their tastes for intoxicants.

The Dean has no power either to interpret the law or to discriminate in its application, and proposals that he so act are among the most precarious possible. On the other hand, his moral obligation is of the most pressing sort, and if he be true that

The law has been involved not through any partial love of New Jersey justice, but to serve the Colledge" the Dean has been working from false motives and it is most seriously at fault. The undergraduates of the great American universities are expected to be the future leaders of the nation. When such future leaders not only tacitly accept the law that can be disregarded, but deliberately propose that it be disregarded, it would be that the phrase "future welfare of the Republic" is a misnomer.

ANOTHER SENIOR —

Is it queer how the good citizens sometimes keep in the background. There is just a bare possibility that this law was on the statute when Mr. Wilson was a resident of Princeton. Still times are changing and the citizen of the future must certainly uphold the law. There is nothing like rushing in at once. Let's have a couple of preceptors stationed at the head of Prospect Ave. to see that no one rides bicycles on the pavement; a couple of official university inspectors on Nassau Street, to see that no tobacco-emitting undergraduates spoil the beauties of the sidewalk; a real live detective to find what funds under the shill smoke cigarettes, with enough compassion to trace a commonplace butt to the very drug store where it was sold. The law must be obeyed. And then the writer of the composition points out why not have a Faculty Committee appointed to investigate cases of arum and bigamy —you never can tell if those young College men may do.

Yale Debated in Debate Syracuse debated Yale in a recent debate on the question: "Resolved, That the State should pay the minimum wage of eight dollars per week for women and six dollars per week for children; if it be agreed that these amounts are necessary for a fair standard of life."
